HELP OF CHEMISTS BIG FACTOR IN WAR

So Says Dr. W. F. Hillebrand of U. S. Bureau in Lecture to Students.

Scientists Probably Will Be Organized for Systematic Research.

"The work of the American chemist will be one of the most important factors in the conduct of the war," says Dr. W. F. Hillebrand, chief chemist of the U. S. Bureau of Standards, who delivered a lecture yesterday in the Chemistry Building on "Work of the Bureau of Standards and Chemical Preparedness."

"Owing to the technical nature of the chemists' work," he said, "the public heretofore has been little interested and has not considered the full import of this labor. But now the war has called on the chemists to give to the United States new and better methods of fighting and for improvements in industry. The necessity for the work of the chemist is seen."

Chemists to Organize for War.

Doctor Hillebrand told of the organization in the ranks of the chemists. At the instigation of the National Defense Council, the National Research Council, which is a branch of the National Academy of Science, sent out questions to all American chemists asking how much of their time they could devote to Government work, what special branch of chemistry they were best fitted for and where they could carry on their work.

Practically every chemist in the United States signified his willingness to give his time to the Government. Some sort of corps will be organized, Doctor Hillebrand thinks, in which they will work systematically and will be listed as being in the employ of the United States.

The chemists, in common with other scientific men, will not be drafted for military duty, but will be left to work on research problems by which they can do more for their country than they could by going to the front. This, thinks Doctor Hillebrand, will be the disposal of all men who are engaged in production which is vital for the United States—the farmers, industrial workers, and those engaged in the transportation of commerce. To send them to the front would be economic waste, he says.

U. S. Has Many Chemical Secrets.
Already the chemists have contributed many improvements to help the United States in its fight. Most of these are being kept secret, but when peace comes the world will marvel at the chemists' work.

Doctor Hillebrand is on his way to his home in Washington, having come west to attend the conference of the American Chemical Society at Kansas City last week. Four hundred of the society's 9,000 members attended the convention. Doctor Hillebrand was formerly with the United States Geological Survey.
